“ Our beautiful granddaughter was so bright and smart and fun. She was sometimes so quiet you didn't realize she was around, while she sat and absorbed the family goings on. It was as if she didn't want to disturb the balance or disrupt the flow by jumping into the fray, but when she did, it was to interject something witty. When she was little she was terribly afraid of flying insects and wouldn't scream and run if one came close, but if we wanted to kill it, she wouldn't hear of that. Her soft heart and love for all creatures was a big part of who she was. She didn't want anyone to suffer injustice or pain, so she could metamorph from a shrinking violet into a fierce defender in a split second. If she saw someone needing a friend, she was the first one to approach and get it done. Her teachers loved her, her fellow student she loved her and all of us loved her more than we can express. How do we go on without her? That journey doesn't have a very clear path right now, so we just have to leave it up to the Lord to show us the way.
