“ I am crying tears of grief and joy – grief over the loss of a dear one I have known all my life, recalling evenings when I babysat my cousin and her sister, Sundays when our extended family sat together in church and worshiped , followed often with meals at my parent’s home crowded about a small dinner table, the first time I saw that big smile on her face when she introduced me to her sweetheart Al in her living room, joyous New Year’s parties at her sister’s home and numerous Friday night parties at her father’s bar in their basement, or all together on her father’s float boat enjoying a day on the lake at her parents cottage, of family stories, laughter and conversations. Now these tears will be replaced with tears of joy as I recall the faith we both held in our Savior and the hope which cousin Sue has now realized, along with the knowledge we both shared that soon God would wipe away every tear from our eyes. When her father died Sue graciously gave me a piece of art glass our grandfather Clayton had made. Here in my study it will now become a reminder of Sue each time I look upon it
